

WASHINGTON | OREGON

IDAHO | MONTANA | ALASKA | BRITISH COLUMBIA

northwest

TRAVEL & LIFE

ANNUAL

50

GETAWAYS

➤➤➤ OUR PICKS FOR THE BEST TRIPS IN 2019

Display until February 28, 2019

NWTRAVELMAG.COM

Spring

11

Klamath Falls,
Oregon

Birding PARADISE

Williamson River

BY TAMARA MULDOON

If the sight of birds taking flight sets your heart aflutter and their songs are music to your ears, plan a spring migration to Klamath Falls, Oregon. The Klamath Basin boasts more than 200,000 acres of prime bird habitat stretching from south central Oregon into northern California, making up the Klamath National Wildlife Refuge Complex. The area is home to more than 350 bird species.

Considered to be one of the best birding locations in the country, the Klamath Basin is located along the Pacific Flyway—a route taken by migratory species on their semi-annual treks between wintering grounds in southern climes and their summer homes in the north. And some birds, like the Bald Eagle, choose to overwinter here.

Although Klamath Falls offers year-round birdwatching, spring is an ideal time to visit when migration is at its peak, generally from mid-March to mid-May. Waterfowl species you are likely to see in spring are the American white pelican, black-crowned night-heron, great egret, tundra swan and many goose and duck species. Shorebirds are commonly seen, including several sandpiper, gull and tern species. Birders come from far and wide to witness western and Clark's grebes do their unusual mating dance—a side-by-side running dash across the surface of the water. Watch for raptors like the bald eagle, red-tailed hawk and American kestrel. Other frequent sightings include ring-necked pheasant, American coot, killdeer plus many common field and woodland species. And these are just the usual suspects; there's hardly a better place to spot an unusual species and expand your life list. An excellent resource for birding in this area is Klamath Basin Audubon Society (klamathaudubon.org).

There are six National Wildlife Refuges here: Upper Klamath, Lower Klamath, Klamath Marsh, Bear Valley, Tule Lake and Clear Lake. Upper Klamath features a 9.5-mile canoe trail, while Lower Klamath and Tule Lake offer driving tour routes with

© Lonesome Duck Ranch, photo by Jak Wonderly Photography

© Discover Klamath CVB, photo credit: Larry Turner Photography

© Discover Klamath CVB, photo credit: Larry Turner Photography

© Bill Gogo

observation points and blinds for birdwatching and photography. Bear Valley's old-growth timber provides roosting sites for bald eagles. Clear Lake is closed to public access.

Flock together with fellow birding enthusiasts during the Klamath Falls Migratory Bird Festival, or join activities at the Tule Lake Bird Festival, both held in mid-May. Or, you might prefer to visit during a quieter time, when the best viewing spots are less crowded.

When planning your trip, you could book a Klamath Falls hotel or RV site. But why not splurge a little and stay at a guest ranch or resort where birdwatching is as easy as walking out the front door?

Lonesome Duck (lonesomeduck.com), a 200-acre guest ranch near the Upper Klamath Refuge, offers two guest houses with full kitchens, Arrowhead Cottage and the family-sized Rivers Edge log home. Rental fees include use of a boat or canoe for paddling on the Williamson River. Arrange a personalized tour with the ranch's naturalist, Marshal Moser, a certified wildlife biologist and experienced field naturalist; or just head out on your own.

The 82-room Lodge at Running Y Resort (runningy.com/resort) near Upper Klamath Lake has on-site dining, room service, a spa, fitness center, swimming pool and hot tub. There is an Arnold Palmer-designed golf course, plus miles of hiking and biking trails threading the resort grounds, home to a variety of wildlife including more than 200 bird species.

When you arrive, stop at the Discover Klamath Welcome Center (discoverklamath.com). Pick up the Klamath Basin Birding Trails Guide and talk with local tourism experts who can help you plan your birdwatching itinerary, as well as suggest local dining and entertainment options. 🐾